

The mark is a bearing, not a compass rose.

A solid wedge rotated 32° off vertical with a notched tail. The rotation is the idea: a direction already chosen, not a centred needle still deciding. Below 32px the notch collapses, so small exports use a simplified silhouette at identical optical weight.

Wordmark: one solid word, Maker at weight 800 against Compass at weight 500, tracking -0.045em. The weight break carries the hierarchy and survives being flattened to one colour.
